JONESBORO', Sept. 15, 1879. MR. EDITOR: The death of Mr. Maxwell by the train on last Saturday is still the subject of much comment.
There are various epinions respecting the affair. The jury of inquest report that he came to bis death by the train running over him. There is much mystery about the affair. It seems highly probable that he was lying on the track in a senseless condition. The theory is, that he was trying to reach home, but fell upon the track, and, and in falling, struck his head against the rail or a crossfie, and lay in a benumbed condition when the train passed over him. Evidently he had been drinking, and when last seen was walking along the track completely under the influence of whisky.

Mr. Maxwell, at the time of hisdeath, was engaged in putting up the brick work of Mr. J. M. Johnson's residence. He was a good mechanic residence. He was a good mechanic, and had a pleasant home and an interesting family. He was called away so suddenly that opportunity for reflection was hardly possible. How short the road from the saloon to the grave sometimes becomes!

Our people are getting more and more interested on the subject of the Fair. As the time approaches the prospect grows brighter. We hope after the Fair to be able to give a history of some of the interesting relics which we have a surances will be on exhibition.

Several of the new buildings now in process of erection will soon be completed. Some of these buildings are pleted. Some of these buildings are beautiful structures. Jonesboro' will have many beautiful residences by and by. The spirit of improvement gives us great encouragement. The schools have opened

The very old-fashioned nature of the whole thing is what takes with the people. Foster is not by any means a great orator. Ten years ago he had never made a speech of any consequence. It is not his ora-tory, but his jovial good nature and true business sense that takes. They all feel acquainted with him when he is gone. He has a faculty of talking to a dozen men all at a time, and still of making them each feel that the conversation is addressed personally to him. This is a quality few men possess and he who has it is happy.

"A prominent Democrat of this city said yesterday: 'Foster might as well go home and wait till election as to be spending any more strength. He is certain to be elected, if the world stands long enough."
